CYCLING IN STYLE...

As Fogg gracefully rolled along, the cobbled roads were no match for his front wheel, which was the size of a grown man. His penny farthing partner, Atticus Attleberry, coasted alongside him. The horizontal afternoon sun attempted to illuminate the street, yet the stacks of smoke from the towering Pall Mall residences almost fully prevented this. A thin sliver of light stroked the side Attleberry's face, igniting in Fogg a sense of melancholy over the commencement of his trip. He was departing his beloved home, London.

UP, UP, AND AWAY...

Following his journey across the Channel in Jules Legrand's hot air balloon, Le Papillon, Fogg encountered an unforeseen challenge. The blustery Parisian winds whirled Le Papillon out of control, hurling Fogg straight out of the carriage door. Luckily, in the nick of time, he clutched onto a flailing rope, and the hot-headed Frenchman was able to yank him up to safety.

THE GOOD LIFE...

Fogg was on his way to Constantinople aboard the Orient Express, travelling through the Italian Alps. Accompanying him sat the famous luthier Ms. Genova. He kept his cool, avoiding eye contact by focusing on the stunning scenery outside of the train. He was warmed by the pine chalets in the valley, the flowers and the lone shepherd conducting a swarm of white dots across the jagged slopes. He saw himself returning here. He dreamed about visiting the locals, trying their delicacies, sitting atop a log, Giovanna perched upon his lap, with the valley rolling down beneath his feet, ruminating his voyage around the world.

GOLDEN CAMEL £16.5

Illegal Joven mezcal, Ancho Reyes Verde chilli liqueur, mandarin & ginger syrup, fresh lime juice, agave syrup and Ardbeg 10 year old Scotch whisky

TRUDGING ON...

*Fogg and his men were cloaked
in white gowns,
accompanied by the famous spice
merchant, Yara Nassar, draped in orange and green.
Sand dunes rolled
off into the distance.
The violently
oppressive sun made the Spice City on the horizon seem an impossible journey
away. But the caravan persevered
and trudged on.*

Mancino Chinato vermouth, chestnut liqueur, Paragon Palo Santo cordial and cinnamon syrup

ALL ABOARD...

*Fogg called out
with all his might
"BERG!" to which Mac Murphy, who had been snoozing
in the afternoon sun
after a boozy night
on deck, rocketed
out of bed, skidded
across the lobby,
hurled himself
up the stairs, out through the door and rapidly assessed
the course of the boat. It was only after he swung the ship starboard side
that he realised
he had forgotten
to dress himself
in his slumber
following his sudden awakening.*

DARN SPOKES...

The Arizona Sun gradually crawled behind the alien hoodoos on the horizon, only just illuminating Fogg, his horses, and the cart with it's severed wheel. Ms. Coppersmith, who had joined Fogg all the way back in Alabama, was kneeling over a pile of glowing logs—a single wisp of smoke rose from the struggling embers. The horses stood huddled, bewildered at the situation. A pile of tools and timber scattered themselves around Fogg and the broken wheel. He felt blessed not to be alone in this dire situation.

A RAPID RECOVERY...

Six hands gripped the edges of the canoe—the concentration on faces of the three travellers highlighted their desperation to exit the rapids. But Kantu, highly experienced in these waters, instructed Fogg and Passepartout to keep calm. Water pummelled them from all directions, creating a rollercoaster of the journey upstream. But Fogg and his cohort held tight, persisting on into still waters.

THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME

After 80 hard days in the thick of it, Fogg collapses into his armchair. The roaring fire opposite the arm chair began to lightly toast his feet. He cocked his head back onto the headrest and drifted off into a deep sleep...
